The OISE Mentorship Program values a key career concept called planned happenstance that encourages curiosity, openness, flexibility, optimism, calculated risk-taking and persistence. As you explore your professional and student identities in this program, recognize that your and your mentor's career trajectories may not be linear.

Come prepared for mentoring in 3 steps by 1) identifying your main interests and transferable skills, 2) researching some potential study or career options for discussion, and 3) setting expectations: be clear about your needs, but remember your mentor is not there to do the work for you but to help you work better.

Tell your mentor exactly what you hope to achieve through mentorship. Set a goal and discuss the ways you may be able to accomplish it. You may also set smaller goals for each meeting, which will help you progress quicker and build skills together.
